Carney: US can't have Canada

By THOMAS SEAL
Bloomberg News/TNS

President Donald Trump won't succeed with his stated ambitions to expand U.S. territory, according to Mark Carney, Canada's newly elected prime minister.

"He has territorial views. That's never, ever going to happen, with respect to Canada — frankly I don't think it's ever going to happen with respect to any other, whether it's Panama or Greenland or elsewhere," Carney told the British Broadcasting Corp. in an interview recorded late Monday.

His Liberal Party won the most seats in a Canadian election on Monday, partly fueled by a backlash to Trump's tariffs and his comments about making the country the 51st U.S. state. Carney said he would "distinguish between what the president wants, and what the president expects" as he prepares to kick off talks with the US administration about a new economic and security deal between the two countries.

"It's going to be a very different one than we've had in the past," Carney said of a potential U.S.-Canada pact. "We'll have a partnership on our terms. There's a win-win possibility there, but on our terms, not on their terms."

Trump said Carney plans to visit the White House within the next week.
