Robbery

camera images of the robber were not available.

The same store was robbed April 11 by a man who also had his face covered. In that case, the robber implied he had a weapon and was able to obtain money before leaving the store.

Nicodemus said he does not know if the two incidents are related. "It's unknown at this time," he said. People with information about the robbery can call the Leavenworth Police Department's clue hotline. 913-682-2583. Information can be provided anonymously.

Measles

Sen. Bill Clifford, a Republican ophthalmologist from Garden City, expressed concern during hearings that not all cases of measles are being reported.

"This weekend I spoke to several pediatricians. In an affected family, one member is going in," he said, speaking at a time when there were 31 reported measles cases. "In fact, they won't allow them in the pediatric clinic. We have well babies there and we don't want to infect them. That one family member is the signal case of what's going on in the family, and the families are not coming in."

Latest data

KDHE updated its measles dashboard Wednesday morning to highlight the number of cases and the affected counties: Finney, Ford, Grant, Gray, Haskell, Kiowa, Morton and Stevens. In addition, it shows vaccination data, which indicates that 39 people with measles were unvaccinated, one did not have age-appropriate vaccinations, three did not have verified vaccination status and three were age-appropriately vaccinated.

One person has been hospitalized.

Dana Hawkinson, medical director of infection prevention and control at the University of Kansas Health

THE LEAVENWORTH TIMES

System, said fully vaccinated people can get the disease, but typically have fewer complications and overall less severity of illness. With one dose of the vaccine, people have 93% protection from measles, and after two doses, 97% protection, he said.

How we got here

Measles was considered eliminated in 2000 but has since popped up throughout the United States, typically in unvaccinated communities. Gregory Poland, director of the Mayo Vaccine Research Group, joined a panel of University of Kansas Health System experts to talk about how we got to where we are today and to address vaccine skepticism.

Poland explained what it means to eliminate a disease.

"You need a robust surveillance system. You need to know are you seeing cases, and are they measles," he said. "Then what you have to have is documentation of interruption of indigenous transmission for at least 12 months. We are very likely going to lose that, and that is a real shame because achieving that in 2000 was a monumental public health achievement."

Indigenous transmission refers to the spread of a disease within a population and is not coming from contact that began with someone outside the community, such as during a trip abroad.

Side effects

Poland said the vaccine that has been available since 1968 is "well documented to be protective and to have minimal side effects."

"It always bothers me when people say, 'Well, isn't natural immunity better.' Before there was a measles vaccine in the U.S., essentially every child got it, so three to four million people a year. Forty-eight thousand of those kids ended up sick enough that they were hospitalized, 1,000 of them developed encephalitis, and 500 of them on average each year died. That's what natural immunity gets you," Poland said.

Side effects of the vaccine are a few cases of low platelets, transient fever and possibly a rash, he said.

No known deaths related to the MMR vaccine given to healthy people have been reported, according to the Infectious Diseases Society of America. Rare cases of deaths from vaccine side effects among children are connected to those who are immune compromised, and it is recommended they not get the vaccine.

Distrust of science

Unfortunately, Hawkinson said, times have changed in terms of how much people listen to medical professionals and how they assess scientific research. Right now is different than in 2019, when the most recent measles outbreak occurred.

"There are major points and reasons why this is much different," he said. "I think it is in the context of extreme disinformation and misinformation and mistrust of medicine and public health. Mistrust of science. We have to get back to knowing and understanding what is true, but it is just so difficult out there."

Hawkinson pointed to an overall decreased willingness to listen to and adhere to medical guidance and recommendations.

"We don't do that when we listen to our plumbers, our mechanics, our lawyers," he said. And, he said, overall vaccination rates have declined.

"Many areas locally here in Kansas and Missouri are down to 90% (of people vaccinated)," he said. "You will only see more patients developing this disease and, unfortunately, the complications that come along with it."
