Governor names private attorney to state Supreme Court

Gov. Laura Kelly on Thursday named a private attorney, who is regarded as a champion of the rights of workers, consumers, and survivors of forced labor and sexual abuse to the Kansas Supreme Court.

Kelly named Larkin Walsh of Leawood to replace Justice Evelyn Wilson, who is stepping down from the court after she was diagnosed with Lou Gherig's disease.

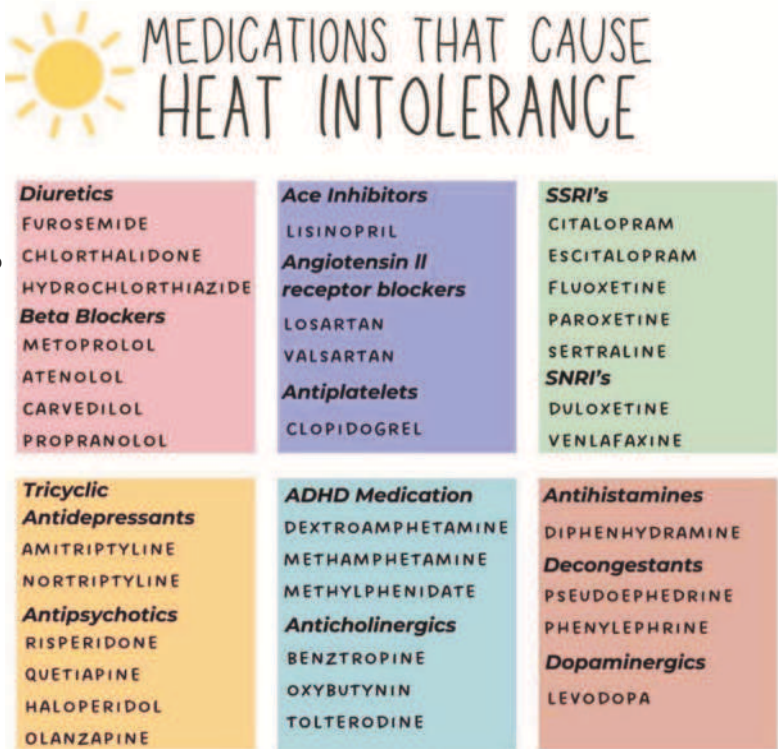

Could Your Medications Be Making You Overheat?

As temperatures rise, it's important to know that some medications can increase your risk of heat intolerance and even heat-related illnesses like heat exhaustion or heat stroke.

Medications that may affect your body's ability to handle heat include:

- * Antidepressants
 - * Antihistamines
 - * Blood pressure medications (like beta blockers or diuretics)
 - * Antipsychotics
 - * Stimulants (used for ADHD or narcolepsy)
 - * Some Parkinson's and seizure medications
- These drugs can interfere with how your body sweats, regulates temperature, or retains fluids.

- What you can do:
- * Talk to your healthcare provider or pharmacist about your medications and heat safety.
 - * Stay well-hydrated and avoid outdoor activities during peak heat.
 - * Wear lightweight clothing and stay in air-conditioned environments when possible.

- * Know the signs of heat-related illness: heavy sweating, dizziness, nausea, confusion, and rapid heartbeat.

Your health and safety matter. If you take any regular medications, check in with your provider before spending extended time in the heat. Stay cool, stay safe!

Shop Kansas Farms attends Great American Farmers Market in Washington, D.C.

Between alternating views of the U.S. Capitol and the Washington Monument on the National Mall, Shop Kansas Farms (SKF) offered a taste of Kansas-crafted foods to visitors at the inaugural Great American Farmers Market in Washington, D.C., from Aug. 3-8.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) hosted the market to showcase agriculture, which made the event a natural fit for Shop Kansas Farms.

“Our goal is to prosper farmers by attracting more customers to them and, after this week in the nation's capital, we are delighted to draw an even greater national customer base to Shop Kansas Farms,” says SKF founder Rick McNary.

McNary and Kylee Stout, business development director for Shop Kansas Farms, flew to the nation's capital with shelf-stable products from five SKF vendors:

- Jones Cattle Premium Beef from Seneca provided beef jerky from cattle grown on their ranch.
- Turkey Knob Farm from Berryton is selling its Rattlesnake Relish, a combination of sweet and heat perfect for your next hamburger or hot-dog.
- Next to Nature Farm from Leavenworth provided honey harvested their 10-acre farm in Northeast Kansas.
- Legacy Farms Coffee

from Moundridge locally roasts coffee grown at its own Honduran plantation, which was an “accidental” purchase originally intended to be a housing development for Honduran families.

- Bruce's Bullseye Farms from Augusta sold jelly made from Kansas' native fruit, the sandhill plum.

“We're so grateful we had the opportunity to highlight Shop Kansas Farms and a few of the incredible products grown in our state,” says Stout. “In addition to engaging with U.S. Department of Agriculture leaders, we were able to provide national exposure for SKF and showcase some of the high-quality food we produce in Kansas.”

In addition to offering consumers Kansas products, McNary and Stout also met with USDA Sec. Brooke Rollins and U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development Sec. Scott Turner.

Shop Kansas Farms started in 2020 as a grassroots initiative to connect consumers with local food producers across the state. Kansas Farm Bureau purchased SKF and has invested in helping communities build local food systems called Harvest Hubs. Today SKF continues to highlight the diversity and quality of Kansas-grown products.

Find all SKF vendors at www.shopkansasfarms.com or visit the original Facebook group.
